

Dear Investor:

I'm writing to you about a company which, for 11 years, has been quietly buying up old, low-grade gold mines with absolutely no intention of mining them until the time was ripe.

Now the time is ripe. The price of gold has more than doubled. And at $640 an ounce, all these low-grade gold mines that nobody wanted are becoming hugely valuable.

Indeed, this company is now sitting on a huge mass of gold in the ground -- about 536 million ounces, worth upwards of $343 billion.

But the shares are still dirt cheap, because it's only recently that they've begun mining. At $300, $400, and even $500 gold, these old gold mines were uneconomical to mine. So their shares went begging.

But today, with gold at $640 an ounce, it's a different story. They're finally in the black. They're raising $350 million to open three more gold mines.

They have so much gold in low-grade ore deposits, this company's shares are extremely sensitive to rising gold prices. Indeed, if the price of gold rises modestly -- between 15% and 30% -- this company will become the largest, most profitable gold mining company in the world. The shares will explode in value.

And when gold gets going, a 15% move up is just a baby step. Gold IS rising, because ...

Mine production of gold is falling sharply and demand is exploding

Most people think rising gold prices encourage mining companies to raise gold production. But the reality is that rising gold prices have actually lowered it. Higher gold prices are allowing gold miners to shift to lower-grade ore. They mine less but make more money.

South Africa is the world's single-largest producer of gold and its production just took the steepest fall in history. Its production is now at an 84-year low.

Australia was the world's second-largest producer. But production has tumbled for 5 years running and is now at a 13-year low.

Meanwhile, demand for gold is soaring on the wings of strong and growing demand from China and India. In China, gold demand was up 21% in the first quarter alone. In India, which is the world's largest consumer of gold, demand rose a whopping 35%.

So you have falling supply and rising demand. The only way to ration the available gold is with rising prices.

In a situation like this, the company I've been telling you about is going to see its long-term plans of accumulating gold properties and waiting for the price of gold to rise come to fruition.

They sowed the seeds during the bear market in gold. Now they're ready to harvest the profits in the bull market. This company's profits and share price are going to explode.

If the price of gold rises only 15%, tens of millions of ounces of gold that were previously uneconomical, will become profitable to mine. On a 30% rise, more than a hundred million ounces of gold that are now uneconomical will become profitable to mine.

They're in the process right now of raising $350 million to open new mines, to harvest the gold.

I think investors who get in now can double, triple, or even quadruple their money depending on whether gold rises 15% or 30%. If gold rises more than 30%, the sky's the limit.

This company is also getting ready to mine its old garbage for uranium. They're going to make a fortune from it

Uranium prices are up 6-fold from five years ago. This company has 56 huge mountains of old "tailings," which is the waste product after the gold ore is processed. Now, they've just discovered that these "tailings" are rich in uranium, which is even hotter than gold right now.

The very first dump is estimated to contain $4.6 billion of uranium. So these tailings, which were once just a pain in the neck that they needed to get rid of, have suddenly become an enormously valuable asset in their own right.

This is a great, two-way play. They've already begun making money mining gold, and their profits are set to explode on a modest move higher in gold. And they're going to be making piles of money mining their old garbage for uranium.

I'm Dan Rosenthal. If you're a long-time silver and gold investor, you may remember me from my Silver & Gold Report newsletter. Back in the '70s and '80s it was the largest independent precious metals newsletter in the world. In 1990, I sold it and retired.

But I never lost my interest in silver and gold investments and several years ago came out of retirement to consult for Tim Staermose, who's the editor of the Natural Resource Hunter. And when Tim told me about this company, it electrified me.

I know Tim as the guy who recommended Zijin Mining, China's biggest gold miner, at 8¢ (split-adjusted). He told his subscribers to get out at 49¢, with more than 500% profits. Profits like that get my attention. After writing a silver and gold newsletter for almost two decades, I know how hard it is to find stocks that perform like that.

Tim also tripled his subscribers' money in Zimplats, a Zimbabwean platinum mining company. They also banked over 50% profits in AngloGold in under a year, and almost tripled their money in AurionGold -- again in under a year.

Tim's an interesting guy -- more thoughtful than the usual newsletter writer. He was an investment banker who foresaw the enormous boom in natural resources that's now underway. He decided to turn in his pinstripes for coveralls and a miner's helmet.

Profits up to 600% or even
970% from natural resource stocks

Ever since, he's been putting his subscribers in stocks like this gold miner I've been telling you about. His subscribers have been piling up amazing gains and profits. And the profits come in more than just precious metals ...

-- For example, 6 years ago, Tim saw that energy prices were headed higher -- and promptly recommended one of the world's largest coal miners. That reco is up a whopping 970%. Had you invested a modest $3,000 in that coal miner back then and held, your stock would be worth $32,100 today.

More...

- In the oil market, Tim's recommendation has subscribers sitting on 74% gains in slightly over a year.
- Tim's subscribers closed out a uranium play with profits of up to 82% in a smidge over a year.
- In nickel, his subscribers closed out three recommendations that could have more than doubled your money. One subscriber, for example, just wrote in about one of Tim's nickel mining recommendations saying ... "I am up 600%. Just got another dividend + 2750 more shares."
- Tim also has his subscribers in a new nickel recommendation, already up 102%.

Natural resources are rarely produced in the same spot they're needed. They have to be moved, and one of the great insights that Tim has brought to the party is that the shares of the companies that help move them are another great way to make money.

- Tim's subscribers bagged up to 73% profits in Neptune Orient Lines -- and are up as much as 155% in Expeditors International, two companies that do just that.
- They also scooped up profits of 184% and 321% in a company providing vital communications links to natural resource companies scattered across vast, remote mining locations.
- They're also up as much as 175% in the shares of Noble Group, a company that acts primarily as a middle-man between the producers and users of natural resources. They put the two together and take a bite out of the middle.

15 open recommendations; 13 winners and 2 losers
As I write this, the losers are down 8% and 7%.
The winners go up to 136% and 143%

Right now, Tim's Natural Resource Hunter has 15 open recommendations. Even with the Dow Industrials getting creamed, only two recommendations are down; one by 7%; the other by 8%.

Of the other 13 open recommendations two could have already more than doubled your money; and a third is up 94%.

With a track record like this, I think Tim is nuts for giving away subscriptions for just $100 a year. But he's doing it.

The big profits — like the 600% gain in the nickel miner; the 500% profits in Zijin, and the open coal trade with more than 900% gains — are all long-term positions. So Tim is stacking the subscription offer in favor of the long term.

Subscribe for one year, just $100. Or take 2 years (just $200) and you get a third year free. And there's a 60-day unconditional money-back guarantee on your subscription fee.

Tim's written a Special Report on this great gold miner with the farsighted policy of buying up old, low-grade gold mines and patiently waiting for higher gold prices -- which are finally here now. You cannot buy this report; it's not for sale.

However, you will get it, free as a bonus, when you subscribe to his monthly newsletter, Natural Resource Hunter.

For the past 11 years, this company had the foresight to buy up old, low-grade gold mines that were uneconomical to mine at $300, $400, even $500 gold. Doing it this way, they've accumulated a huge mass of gold -- about 536 million ounces -- worth upwards of $343 billion.

There's no other company I know of as sensitive to rising gold prices as this one. With gold now firmly above $600 an ounce, this company is at last beginning to mine some of this gold and is finally in the black. Indeed, if the price of gold rises modestly -- between 15% and 30% -- this company will become the largest, most profitable gold mining company in the world. The shares will explode in value.
